Report for Club Meeting, January 6, 2021

by Bruce MacDonald

Music and Meaning on Garde stage; Club Helps Fire victims; Club members get grant for movie on Holocaust; and club members hear from a globe-traveling photojournalist

The New London Community Orchestra will present its Concert for Healing at 7:30 pm, Jan. 17, Martin Luther King, Day at the Garde Arts Center. And one of our own will be on stage.

Offered without without charge, the concert will feature a composition by an orchestra member, Kirk Edwards, who wrote the march when he was a member of the Coast Guard band some years ago.

He told Kristina Dorsey at The Day recently that he thought a march was appropriate given the role marches played in King's quest for civil rights for the African-Americans.

"Edwards tried to capture the majestic aspect of King's marches in the first strain of his composition, followed by a second strain that imitated the call-and-response of a Baptist preacher, which King was," Dorsey wrote.

Rotarian and orchestra member Jerry Fischer announced the concert at last week's meeting and asked his fellow members to attend. He will be seen on stage that night with his string base, making his melodious contributions to the evening's program.

"It's going to be a concert of classical music composed by African American composers," Fischer said. "There will be jazz, a few renditions of songs important to the African-American community, and of course Kirk Edward's incomparable work."

Steve Sigel, the Garde's executive director and a former Rotarian, has pointed out on a number of occasions that the Garde has an updated air handling system that cleanses the air frequently.

Oh and Steve will also be on stage with his violin. It's going to be a night full of good music and meaning.

With a nod to the ever-present Covid virus, masks will be required and seating in the 1200-seat performance venue will be spaced out in the social distancing applied in so many places these days.

Grant awarded for locally produced Holocaust film (by two Rotarians)

Connecticut Humanities has awarded a $24,999 Implementation Grant matching grant to the Garde Arts Center in New London in support of the production of the documentary film "Henny and Hannover."

The film will be produced by southeastern Connecticut resident Jerry Fischer, who produced the film “Harvesting Stones” for CPTV in 2017, and will be co-directed and filmed by National Geographic photographer, documentarian, and cinematographer Todd Gipstein.

The film will premiere in 2023 at the Garde Arts Center and will air on CPTV.

Tax-deductible donations to support the film can be made to the Garde Arts Center with a memo “dedicated to Henny and Hannover” by mail to the Garde Arts Center, 325 State St., New London, CT, 06320, or online at gardearts.org. Indicate in the additional comments that the donation is for Henny and Hannover. More information can be obtained at the film’s website HennyTheMovie.org or by writing to info@hennythemovie.org.

Dean Pagani, the Connecticut-based photo journalist and writer has been on the move—globally speaking—and he came home with images and reflections.

To anyone who has read the writings of global wanderers like Paul Theroux, the lure of the road can be irresistible.

It sure was to a recent speaker, Dean Pagani, who took it to heart and traveled around the world and took at least one domestic trips in recent years. Stops included Vietnam, Thailand and Cambodia, where some of his findings may surprise you.
